

Eyre Affair is a fabulously witty and continuously mind boggling novel about 1985 but not as we know it. Literary Detective Thursday Next is on the trail of the villain Acheron Hades. In her attempts to fix the damage that Hades has done, Next has delved into Jane Eyre literally!!! This novel rummages through the world of literature and fiction where rules of time and space are no longer correct. This is the only place where you can travel into a Wordsworth poem, talk to Mr Rochester and own a pet Dodo. Read this book and you will have to read the next in the series!!!

Thursday Next continues her story in 'Lost in a good book' as she is recovering from her battle with Acheron Hades and changing Jane Eyre, Next is devastated to find that her husband (after a month of marriage) has been eradicated to only her memory. To find out who is behind the eradication and the attempted blackmail from the Goliath Corporation, Next goes straight into fiction again to find out the answers. Apprenticed by Jurisdiction to Miss Havisham from Great Expectations, Next must try to find her husband as well as dealing with Aornis (Acheron's sister) who has the uncanny ability to make one lose their memories. Once again, this book takes the reader on a journey through fiction like no other. Continue reading about Thursday Next in the third novel 'Well of Lost Plots'.

The third in the series about Thursday Next finds the reader in the Well of Lost Plots. Next is on holiday as part of the Jurisdiction Character Exchange Program and has delved into the small time detective novel "Caversham Heights". Battling her memory loss of her husband due to Aornis, Next is pushed into the underworld of Jurisdiction while battling a murderous Minotaur, teaching two generics how to gain a character of their own and discovering beasts like Grammasites that set out to destroy novels from the inside. Readers will love this new side of fiction that Next has taken us into.
